Hi. My name is David Emerson. I am a long-term cancer survivor, cancer coach and director of PeopleBeatingCancer. Welcome to the Pancreatic Cancer Coaching Program (PCCP) Introduction.

My experience has been that most newly diagnosed cancer patients don't know what they don't know. When I was first diagnosed in early 1994 with an incurable blood cancer, I had never heard of my type of cancer. I knew little about conventional, integrative and complementary treatments for my cancer. Like most newly diagnosed cancer patients I spent the first months post diagnosis working through my anger, fear and grief. I assumed my oncologist had my health under control. I was wrong.

Please understand that conventional oncology is an important component in the life of a cancer patient. However I now understand that in order to manage a complicated disease like pancreatic cancer, the newly diagnosed patient must look to all possible forms of evidence-based research and think beyond surgery, chemotherapy and radiation to manage his/her cancer.

Since the launch of PeopleBeatingCancer.org in June of 2004, I have researched and written about pancreatic cancer at all stages. In 2018 I decided to curate and create a specific cancer coaching program for pancreatic cancer patients, survivors and caregivers.

I created the Pancreatic Cancer Coaching Program (PCCP) in order to give newly diagnosed pancreatic cancer patients and caregivers the experience, research and information that I believe they need to manage an aggressive disease like pancreatic cancer.

Since 2004 I have researched and curated more than 135 studies, articles and therapies for pancreatic cancer that, when combined with my own long-term survivor experience addresses my old regret "If I knew then what I know now..."

A diagnosis of pancreatic cancer requires dozens of life-changing decisions in the days, weeks and months following the words "you have cancer." The PCCP program gives you the research, information, and survivor experience you need broken down into those topics that research indicates will help you fight your cancer. No single guide, no single therapy is a silver bullet. The PCCP is designed to work as an all encompassing lifestyle going forward.
